JUNGIAN DREAM WORK COURSE

Among basic human experiences, dreams have occupied an honored place in most societies as sources of guidance "from the gods." Building on Freud's pioneering exploration of the personal unconscious, Jung rediscovered the transpersonal unconscious and extensively studied its manifestations in culture, religion, and in the "big" dreams of his patients. In this course, participants will gain an understanding of the function of dreams in the psychic economy, of Jung's approach to working with dreams, as well as some practice in interpreting selected dreams. Though participants may work on several of their own dreams, this course is not intended to serve as therapy or personal analysis.

- Sep 18 "The Small Hidden Door to the Soul"
- Sep 25 A Compensatory Function: Guidance for Living
- Oct 2 HE and SHE: The Mysterious OTHER Within

PEGASUS LEAPING FORTH--Revisioning Jung's Refusal of the Artist Soul

In this lecture with slides, Russell A. Lockhart will explore the nature of the new dominant arising from the chaos of a world losing its way. This new dominant was hinted at in Jung's image of "the coming guest."

This "coming guest" must be welcomed in a spirit of Eros and will be sensed first in the imaginal realms that are the source of art and poetry. Welcoming the guest requires a "revisioning" of the Jungian approach to art and begins with a re-analysis of Jung's initial experiences with the anima and a reworking of a crucial image that Jung carved in his wall at Bollingen. This image holds an intuition of a major dynamic in the transition from the Piscean "Age of Tradition" to the Aquarian "Voice of Psyche."

Preparatory reading: "Confrontation with the Unconscious," Chapter VI, pp. 170-199, of C. G. Jung's autobiography, Memories, Dreams, Reflections.

Russell A. Lockhart is a practicing Jungian analyst, research clinician, and former Director of Training at the C. G. Jung Institute of Los Angeles. He has a Ph.D. in psychology from the University of Southern California and was research director of the department of psychology at UCLA.

North Area YWCA, 13305 Third Avenue N.E., Seattle.
